

Bradley McGillivray

Management & Booking: Sheldon Bradley

Email: mojazzmo@gmail.com Phone: 604 250 5078

BIO - 100 words

For two decades, The Bradley McGillivray Band has been electrifying Vancouver's music scene with their potent blend of soul, funk, and blues. At the heart of this powerhouse act are Ruth McGillivray's commanding vocals and Sheldon Bradley's innovative guitar work, backed by the funk-infused rhythms of bassist Paul Freeman and drummer Hoto Parker. Drawing inspiration from legends like Etta James and Aretha Franklin, they craft original music and fresh interpretations that transcend genre boundaries. Their 2008 album "Livin' This Way" earned critical acclaim as one of the year's best Canadian blues albums. Beyond their musical prowess, the band demonstrates social commitment through benefit concerts and local charity support, offering audiences an authentic, soul-stirring experience.

BIO - 200 words

The Bradley McGillivray Band has been a soul-stirring force in Vancouver's music scene for two decades, blending soul, funk, and blues into an electrifying sound. At its core are Ruth McGillivray's commanding vocals and Sheldon Bradley's innovative guitar work, a partnership that has thrived for over 25 years.

Ruth's knock-you-flat vocals intertwine seamlessly with Sheldon's fusion of urban jazz and gritty blues, complemented by the funk-infused rhythms of bassist Paul Freeman and drummer Hoto Parker. Drawing inspiration from legends like Etta James, Keb Mo, Aretha Franklin, and Warren Haynes, they craft original music and fresh interpretations of classics that transcend genre boundaries.

Critics have lauded their talent, with Canadian Musician Magazine praising their 2008 album "Livin' This Way" as one of the best Canadian blues albums in years. Their discography includes two band albums and two solo projects by Ruth.

Beyond music, Bradley McGillivray demonstrates social commitment through fundraising concerts in La Paz, Mexico, and support for local food banks and shelters. With their eclectic repertoire, powerful stage presence, and genuine warmth, they continue to captivate audiences, offering not just entertainment, but an authentic, soul-stirring experience that leaves listeners craving more.

BIO - 300 words

The Bradley McGillivray Band, a soul-stirring force in Vancouver's music scene for two decades, blends soul, funk, and blues into an electrifying sound that captivates audiences from the first note. At the heart of this powerhouse act are Ruth McGillivray's commanding vocals and Sheldon Bradley's innovative guitar work, a partnership that has flourished for over 25 years.

Ruth's knock-you-flat vocals seamlessly intertwine with Sheldon's unique fusion of urban jazz and gritty blues. Their dynamic is complemented by the funk-infused rhythms of bassist Paul Freeman and drummer Hoto Parker, creating a tight, polished ensemble that prioritizes authentic connection with their audience.

Drawing inspiration from legends like Etta James, Keb Mo, Aretha Franklin, and Warren Haynes, Bradley McGillivray crafts original music and fresh interpretations of classics that showcase their musical versatility. Their approach to blues and soul transcends genre, embodying an attitude of resilience that resonates through every performance.

Critics have taken notice of their exceptional talent. Canadian Musician Magazine praised their 2008 album "Livin' This Way" as one of the best Canadian blues albums in years, while Real Blues Magazine ranked them among Vancouver's top five bands. The Vancouver Province lauded the balance between Ruth's imposing vocals and Sheldon's smooth, jazz-influenced guitar work. The Bradley McGillivray discography contains two band albums to date, along with two solo projects by Ruth.

Beyond their musical prowess, Bradley McGillivray has made a significant impact in the community. Their ongoing fundraising concerts in La Paz, Mexico and support for their local Food Banks and shelters demonstrate their commitment to using their talents for social good.

With their eclectic repertoire, powerful stage presence, and genuine warmth, The Bradley McGillivray Band continues to solidify its place as one of Vancouver's live music treasures. Their performances promise not just entertainment, but an authentic, soul-stirring experience that leaves audiences craving more.